ENRICHMENT SESSIONS

FRIDAY, MAY 12

10 – 11:15 a.m.

Breaking Ground and Making Moves – An Exciting Panel of Carolina’s Innovators and Entrepreneurs

Blue Zone (Concourse Level), Kenan Stadium

Hear from students and faculty members engaged in exciting innovation and entrepreneurship in the College of Arts and Sciences. You’ll learn about the excellence of the environment in which students and faculty thrive in at Carolina today.

1:30 – 2:45 p.m.

Preserving the Quality of the University

Blue Zone (Concourse Level), Kenan Stadium

Carolina, like many public universities, faces a unique and critical challenge today: how to sustain the quality of faculty and facilities and keep costs affordable for students and their families. Tuition has increased significantly over the last two decades. It is an increasing challenge to preserve affordability and control student debt. UNC must compete for faculty with colleges and universities that pay higher salaries. Support from state revenues never fully funds university operations and must be renewed every session. The public university system is only one of the demands on state revenues legislators must balance. Executive Vice Chancellor and Provost James “Jim” W. Dean Jr. will moderate and participate in a discussion considering how Carolina remains among the world’s most respected universities in these times. Panelists will include Associate Provost and Director of Scholarships and Student Aid Rachelle Feldman, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Dr. Kevin Guskiewicz, and Chair of the Faculty, John Stackhouse Distinguished Professor of Surgery/Joint Appointment in Microbiology and Immunology, Director of the North Carolina Jaycee Burn Center, Vice Chair of Research in the Department of Surgery, and Medical Director of Respiratory Therapy Bruce A. Cairns.

3–4 p.m.

The Essential Liberal Arts and Humanities Curriculum

Blue Zone (Concourse Level), Kenan Stadium

Current debates about education often suggest that students need to focus on technical training in order to find jobs and contribute to the modern economy. Carolina is also rethinking its core curriculum, but its long tradition of excellence in the humanities and liberal arts shows that a liberal arts education is a great pathway to future leadership and creativity in American society. This session with historian Lloyd Kramer and others will focus on how the humanities and liberal arts remain vital components of a Carolina education.

4:15–5:30 p.m.

Where Do We Go From Here?

Blue Zone (Concourse Level), Kenan Stadium

If 70 is the new 50, then what's ahead? Join Jan Busby-Whitehead, director of the UNC Center for Aging and Health and director of the Hartford Center of Excellence in Geriatric Medicine, as she shares how there can be much to look forward to in the years ahead. Dr. Busby-Whitehead is also the Mary and Thomas Hudson Distinguished Professor in Medicine, and chief of the UNC Division of Geriatric Medicine.

ENRICHMENT SESSIONS

SATURDAY, MAY 13

9:30 – 10:30 a.m.

Saturday Morning in Chapel Hill: Carolina Across the Generations

Murphey Hall Auditorium

How different is student life today as compared to Carolina in the 1960s? Discover the differences and similarities in the “the Carolina experience” across the generations when we assemble a select panel of alumni and current students. Moderated by Dick Baddour '66, retired after 45 years of service as a University administrator in student affairs, undergraduate admissions, the School of Law and athletics.

10:45 – 11:45 a.m.

What the Future Holds

Murphey Hall Auditorium

Human beings are blessed to inhabit a small, finite planet with frangible environs that many generations before us have called a Garden of Eden. Members of the class of 2017 could find global challenges in its future if we continue to hold fast to a culturally prescribed illusion: there are no limits to the growth of global production, consumption and population activities by the human species. Moderated by Ed Wilson '67, join panelists Faith Fogle '67 and Steve Salmony '67 in a discussion about sustainability and how we can keep the “Garden” alive.
